EXTRACTS FROM KNICKERBOCKER. In the Editor's table we find the following extract from a new but unpublished novel .-In style it is a fair specimen of many novels that have been published--

" * * * "Come to the Hermit's Cave!

And they left. Their path lay through the thick forest, over miry groves and pleasant swamps. where red and several other kinds of squirrels were springing around them, with their puffed-out cheeks filled with cocoa-nuts for the winter's store. The gentle owl, enjoying the sunny afternoon, sang merrily in the branches. The snail and the wildcat skipped pleasantly together upon the verdant green. The smooth emerald serpent hissed a welcome to the maidens, as they tripped along, stopping now and then to pluck and eat the luscious herse chesnuts hanging in rich clusters above their heads.

Soon the cave was reached. They looked gal meal of flag-root and sorrel. At their entrance he started and gazed earnestly at the maiden. Equally fixed was her gaze .-They-

of the Hermit.

"He came into the world at a small town called Kansas, which has since become a large and flourishing territory, on Independence day, 1776, years ago-the very day on which the Fourth-of July was signed. Be ing of a free disposition, and a good penman, be would have undoubtedly signed his name with the rest, but anavoidable circumstances at home prevented. Of all his early history we have no account, owing to the negligence of his posterity; so that we hear nothing of him whatever until he reached the age often years, when he commenced attending the village school. Here he excelled in all athletic sports; could jump four rods and a half to any other girl's or boy's one; and. moreover was at the head of every class in chastised a boy three times his own size, for throwing a piece of orange peel at a little appointed in a love affair, he attempted to commit suicide by taking one-thirtieth of a barrel of whiskey, having read in the papers that there was enough strychnine in a barrel of whiskey to kill thirty men. But his constitution was naturally so strong that its only effect was to make him a little talkative, and he concluded he was worth saving a little

The following will explain themselves, and, therefore, need no titles:

"The late lamented John Wilson, the celebrated Scottish vocalist, who was as excellent a man as he was a singer, used to narrate a circumstance which will remind 'S. G. M.' of the subject matter of his communication to the editor, which we may say in passing, awaits future publication:- 'One pleasant Sunday in Glasgow,' said be one night in the sauctum, 'a stalwart Highland man entered a drug store, or apothecary's shop, and said - 'Have ye any spirits, or alcohol? All the shops are closed, and I canna get a quaigh o' Glenlivat or Islay; I am sair thirsty. Canna ye give me a wee drap o' 'somethin' warmin'?' It really did seem a hard case; and the good bearted apothecary helped him to what he supposed to be an uncommonly stiff born of ture spirits; or alcohol. The man drank it off; gave him one wild look; spread his two hands suddenly over the abdominal portion of his person, em treatment. and immediately vacated the premises. The spothecary was startled: 'What was the matter with the man?' He took down the vessel | olent effort, have been of great benefit to the alfrom which he had poured the devouring flicted, especially to the young, and they have refluid, and found that he had given the man solved to devote themselves, with renewed zeal, by mistake, a bumper of aqua-fortis! He was frighten d half to death! The man bad left his bat behind him, and the anothecary, hare-headed, rushed out with it in his hand, his bair flying in the wind, and 'made hot pursuit' after the fugitive. But he was hopelessly gone. What a life of anxiety the poor fellow lived for some three months! He was afraid to open the daily newspapers, lest he should see recorded the mysterious and melancholy death of his victim in the public streets. At length, hewever, his fears died away. Nothing was beard from the missing sufferer, until six months after the awful event; when, one pleasant Sunday morning. who should walk into his shop, but the 'dientical' individual himself! 'Have you got, said he, to the astounded apothecary, have you got any more of that liquor you sold me the last time I was here? If you have, give me a horn. I never tasted anything like it. It went right to the spot! Why, it lasted me a fortnight. No reduction about that fluid!" But the apothecary contented bimself this time, by giving his returned customer a glass of pure spirits, as being by much the safer drink of the two."

The following touching account of "Old Grimes's Last Gasp" we are assured is eutirely "lounded":-"After remaining asome fifteen, perhaps sixteen, minutes in that sweet, placid, balf-unconscious state, which is the gently 'inclined plane' of dissolution, 'that good old man' slowly lifted his filmy lids. With a fluttering hope, that was still of the old inteligence far down in the cold, vacuous depths of those beloved eyes, where once retributive lightning and healing benison, the lion and the lamb of his nature, had lain together. Suddenly the lips moved: I bent eagerly forward as the ghost of that voice, once so orotund and majestic, murmured brokenly: 'What-kind-of-a-panic is this, which is-disturb-ing thecountry?' I could only shake my head in sorrowful incompreheusion, for grief bad bereft me of voice. The old eyes were irradiate once more; a palpitating fire seemed to possess them, as half-rising, and with a victorious wave of the arm, he shouted: 'a ticpanie!' The jaw fell; there was a gurgle in the throat; and--'we ne'er shall see him

There is a vein of originality pervading the annexed lines, which will transfix the attention of all lovers of the sublime and mys-tie in poetry:-Rise, Jupiter, with emerald hair. And wake the snakes of Thessaly; Who does not not know that par cakes are Devoured subjectively-and why!

Wise sages, of the olden time, With introverted vision look; But ah! a fip is not a dime. And for mixed 'snitters' can't be took.

Go, lovers of the sacred Styx, And grind your laughter into tears;

While plaintive melody of bricks Floats through the silence of the years, Ye cannot count me as I run; I play with stars at pitch and toss I am the uncle of the sun. Half aligator and half hoss! Do you take the idea?

The spirit of Daniel Webster was called up lately, in a spiritual circle in Northampton Mass. He confessed he had made many mistakes in his social and political life while on earth, and in his Dictionary. (!!)

WEAKNESS OF THE STOMACH AND INDIGESTION,-ANOTHER GREAT CURE EFFECTED BY BOERHAVE'S HOLLAND BIT-TERS .- The wife of Pieter De Witte, living in Holland Town, Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, suffered much from Weakness of the Stomach and Indigestion. She had been under a physician's care for some time, but the disease seemed to baffle even his skill. She purchased some HOLLAND BITTERS at our office, which has given tone to her stomach; her appetite and strength are returning, and we firmly believe in and beheld the Hermit preparing his tru- that this is another great cure effected by your medicine.
